

RED WOLF

Canis rufus

There are two species of wolf in North America- the gray wolf and the red wolf. Red wolves are smaller than gray wolves. They are buff-colored or brown with some black along their backs. The backs of their ears, head and long legs are often tinged with a reddish color. The red wolf diet consists mainly of white-tailed deer and small mammals.

GRAY WOLF

Canis lupus

There are two species of wolf in North America- the gray wolf and the red wolf. Gray wolves can vary in color from white to black, tan to reddish brown. Gray Wolves were once one of the most widely distributed wild mammals inhabiting most of the available land in the northern hemisphere. Due to the destruction of their habitat and persecution by humans, wolves now occupy only about two-thirds of their former range worldwide.

